APRIL 2021

There were no cruise submissions for this month, so below are some blast from the past pictures of a couple cars I regret selling (tears running down my cheek) for your viewing pleasure.

Back in the day I built a '68 Barracuda notchback with a 380 HP 360 Magnum crate motor. With an eye on even more power, I had the heads ported. Still not enough I opted for a two-stage nitrous system from NOS. It was the hot system at the time, designed to optimize traction by launching at a lower horsepower level and then activating the second stage once underway. Fast forward 25 years and NOS, now owned by Holley, has released a new kit, designed to compete with the turbo and supercharger communities. Looking more like a new 5G cell tower than a nitrous system, it boasts 20 stages and a ridiculous 3500 additional horsepower, appropriately named the "Moonshot." Whether that is for the acceleration it will provide or for where your cylinder heads are going when the system is activated is anyone's guess. Certainly, something for the guy with the grossly obscene horsepower is not enough attitude.
